1. Our work

Quentin & Dundee works with institutions, organizations, and campaigns at moments that demand action. We bring research, strategy, narrative, creative, media, fundraising, partnerships, technology, and measurement together around an institution’s objective.

The website describes capabilities and possible areas of work. Availability, scope, staffing, deliverables, compensation, and responsibilities are determined for each engagement and documented in a written agreement. A listed capability does not mean that every service is included in every engagement or available in every jurisdiction.

2. Professional boundaries

Website materials are general information about Q&D’s institutional work. They do not provide legal, tax, accounting, investment, or other regulated professional advice. Clients should involve appropriately qualified advisers where their decisions require it.

References to capital, partnerships, or philanthropic strategy describe institutional planning, relationship development, and execution. They are not an offer of an investment product or a commitment to arrange a transaction. Any activity requiring a particular authorization or professional qualification must be evaluated separately before an engagement is agreed.

3. Fundraising, philanthropy, and campaigns

Fundraising and philanthropic work depends on the institution’s mission, authorization, recipient arrangements, and the rules that apply to the activity. This public website does not collect donations. A discussion of giving opportunities does not establish charitable status, deductibility, eligibility, or suitability for a particular donor.

Public, civic, and election-related engagements require a defined scope and review of the relevant election, fundraising, advertising, disclosure, privacy, and platform requirements. Describing a capability on this website does not constitute an endorsement of a candidate, organization, or cause.

4. Outcomes and measurement

Institutional outcomes depend on many factors, including available resources, execution, audience response, timing, and external conditions. Q&D does not guarantee fundraising totals, media attention, participation, revenue, policy changes, or election outcomes.

Any objectives, forecasts, or illustrative examples should be read with their stated assumptions and time period. A result from one project is not a promise of a comparable result elsewhere. Measures of progress and reporting expectations are agreed in the relevant engagement.

5. Research and third-party references

Research and commentary may draw on public sources and information available at a particular time. Sources can be incomplete or change. Public materials should not replace institution-specific diligence or professional judgment.

References to institutions, sectors, publishers, platforms, or other organizations do not by themselves identify a client, partner, sponsor, or endorser. Third-party content remains the responsibility of its publisher. Client-specific confidentiality and publication permissions are governed by the relevant agreement.

6. Discussing a potential engagement

For a conversation about your institution or initiative, contact hello@quentindundee.com. For questions about these disclosures, permissions, or the terms applicable to a proposed engagement, contact legal@quentindundee.com.
